

TUNISIA

Tunisia had been conquered by the Arabs, and nominally passed under the control of the Turkish Empire. Local rule was headed by the Husaynid dynasty Bey, who were effectively autonomous by the 19th century. From the 1840s, French and Italian commercial interest grew in this region. Loans were advanced by western financiers to the Bey, to advance development, and for personal reasons. Due to high interest rates and poor management, a crisis was reached in 1869 when the country was declared bankrupt. A commission, led by France, with British and Italian help, took over financial control of the country, leaving the Bey merely as a figurehead. The Congress of Berlin, held in 1878 to supervise the dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire, granted Tunisia to the French sphere of influence. Following tribal uprisings, the French militarily occupied Tunis in 1881 and declared the Regency of Tunis to be a French Protectorate. From the 1880s, French financial systems were gradually introduced, with revenue stamps to collect duty on documents and financial papers. The revenue thus collected helped repay the old debts and aided social welfare.

By the 1930s, French investment in agriculture, mines and infrastructure had brought considerable growth to the country, albeit the major beneficiaries remained French settlers and administrators. After the brief German occupation of 1942, Tunisia returned to French hands, but demands for independence had been growing, and France was no longer able to sustain her former vast Empire.

Under the leadership of Habib Bourguiba, the Neo-Destour party campaigned for autonomy by political means and armed conflict. Faced with defeat at Dien-Bien Phu in Vietnam, and an increasingly desperate situation in Algeria, France granted autonomy to Tunisia in 1956. The former Bey briefly became the monarch.

Elections of 1956 gave sweeping support to Bourguiba, who abolished the monarchy, replacing it with a secular but moderate one-party state. In 1981 Ben Ali replaced Bourguiba in a velvet coup. Despite economic progress up to 2000, he in turn was forced to leave the country in 2011 in the wake of mass protests about unemployment and unequal opportunities, which turned into the "Jasmine Revolution".

TUNISIA EFFETS DE COMMERCE - FORERUNNER

During the 1860s and 1870s financial emergency, a French-led Commission was set up to administer the finances of Tunisia. The sale of farm produce was controlled, and a small pro-rata tax (1% of the highest figure in the sales band) was applied on the receipts. This was a local forerunner of the Effets de Commerce (Bills of Lading) which taxed all shipments of goods (whether agricultural or industrial).

c1870. Locally printed. Value at right in black, the figure in the small circle in centre is the tax, the outer inscription in black is the value of the transaction. The 1P and 2P are expressed as "1.00" and "2.00", the higher values are apparently expressed just as single digits. The blue cachet is an administrative control cachet. Both value and control cachets were handstruck, the value normally roughly upright but this varies and can be inverted. No wmk. Imperf.
